Richard C. Finch Folk Graves Digital Photograph
Collection, 1967-2015

COLLECTION SUMMARY

Creator:

Finch, Richard C.

Inclusive Dates:

1967-2015, bulk 2009-2015

Scope & Content:

Born digital collection contains 22 text documents, 1 spreadsheet, 9 PDF files, and 4,570 digital images documenting different types of covered graves. The documents include two previously published articles, the rest contain data regarding materials, dates, church affiliations, and geographical locations of folkloric graves. A later addition, incorporated into the original files, included an unpublished article with 7 appendices and approximately 700 further photographs.

Dr. Finch has visited hundreds of cemeteries in Tennessee, Alabama, Kentucky, Arkansas, North Carolina, Louisiana, and Texas photographing covered graves. These graves have some sort of roof or covering protecting the length of the grave, sometimes with separate tombstones. Finch's main focus has been on comb graves, so called because architecturally, the slabs of stone make a roof or comb over a grave. These graves often have triangular or trapezoidal rocks on the end which make the tombs look as though they are covered by a "tent" of rock. Finch documented other grave types: cairn graves, coffin graves, variants or hybrids of covered graves, grave houses, necked discoid graves, and a scraped earth cemetery.

Administrative/Biographical History

Richard Finch was born in Georgetown, Texas, and moved to Tennessee in 1961. He received a bachelor's of science in geology in 1965 and a master's of science in geology in 1967, both from Vanderbilt University. He obtained his PhD from the University of Texas at Austin. Finch's specialties include structural geology and geology of Central America, where he worked as an exploration geologist from 1972 to 1975. Afterwards, he returned to Tennessee and taught in the Department of Earth Sciences at Tennessee Technological University. He retired from TTU in 2000. Finch has researched other subjects as well, such as the caves of Honduras, William Walker and the comb grave tradition.

Organization/Arrangement of Materials

The content of this born digital collection is stored in a limited access folder on TSLA's network drive (reference copies are available on DVDs). The files are then grouped into subfolders of digital images and documents. The digital images folder is further divided into subfolders by state. Each state folder is then divided into subfolders by county, and each county folder is further divided into subfolders by type of grave. Each digital image file name contains the United States Geological Survey (USGS) topographical map quadrant and cemetery name in which the graves are found. There is also a subfolder, labeled "Miscellaneous," for files whose locations were unable to be determined.

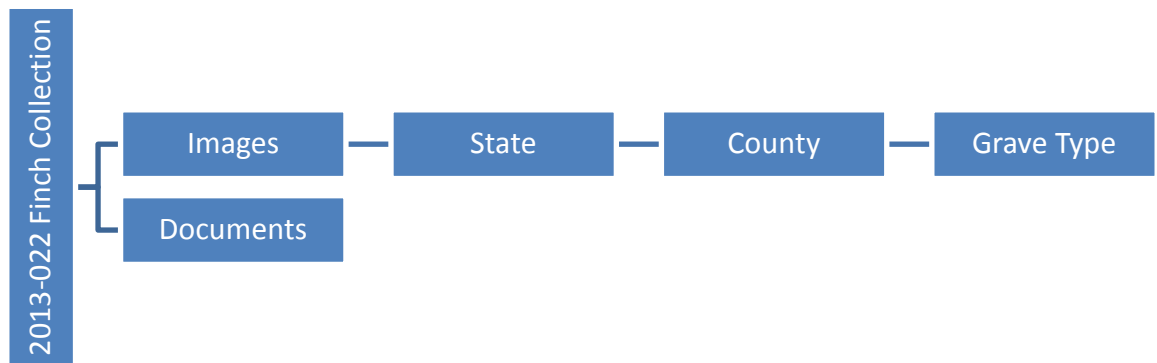

Dr. Finch's donation of additional digital images was incorporated into the original collection. However, numerous problems arose during this process primarily because the addition also included copies of most of the original files. In many instances, images in the original collection were numbered differently than the exact same image in the addition. So, for example, if the original collection contained 5 images of Cemetery X and the addition contained 12 images of Cemetery X, image file "Cemetery X 1.jpg" in the original collection might be image file "Cemetery X 4.jpg" in the addition. In each occurrence of this, duplicate files were removed and the remaining files were renumbered to eliminate any gaps in the numbering sequence.

Similarly, in several instances there were two complete sets of photographs for the same cemetery after the additional images were added to the original collection. In all of these cases, it was caused by the name of the cemetery being slightly different in the file name between the files in the addition and the original collection. The set with the file name that appeared to be most complete was kept and the other set was removed.

Another complication that arose while trying to incorporate the additional images into the original collection was the length of many of the file names. Along with the USGS map quadrant and cemetery name, most of the file names also include notes about individual graves. In numerous instances, these notes made the file names so long, that error messages were received whenever the files were attempted to be copied or moved. To fix this problem while still preserving the information in the file names that were too long, the file name was copied and pasted into the "Document Title" field of the file's EXIF data using Adobe Bridge, and then the file name was shortened.
